

SPONSOR

Washington's News, Traffic &amp; Weather

104.3 fm • 107.7 fm • 1500 am • 820 am

LISTEN LIVE

News

Traffic

Weather

FederalNewsRadio.com

SEARCH

WTOP NEWS

Print this article

Email this article

AIM this article

Home Page » News » National » Stories

TOP NEWS

Home

Local

National

World

Sprawl &amp; Crawl

Traffic

Weather

Sports

Business

Technology

Health

Entertainment

Elections

Science

Education

Government

Midwest News

Recalls

Call For Action

Closings &amp; Delays

News Links

Photo Galleries

Program Schedule

SPECIAL REPORTS

Tsunami Disaster

Ronald Reagan

Cicada Central

America on Alert

Sniper Shootings

Supreme Court

Lead in Water

WTOP FEATURES

Mike Causey's
Federal Report
GEICO

Ask the CIO
Cisco Systems

Ask the Doctor
Suburban Hospital

Utah Restaurant Bets on Honesty

Updated: Tuesday, Jul. 6, 2004 - 3:05 AM

By PAUL FOY
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - One World Cafe owner/chef Denise Cerreta ditched fixed prices for the honor system a year ago, and her social experiment is on the verge of showing a profit.

"It's between you and the box," Cerreta said of a money chest that sits next to a water jug and mugs on a serving table. "We continue to grow. We continue to make money."

Melva Sine, president of the Utah Restaurant Association, said many restaurants are moving to a menu-free, size-optional format. But she knows of none that have experimented with the honor system.

The One World Cafe depends on the kindness of strangers, rich and poor.

Take the landlord, who lets Cerreta determine her rent: $1,650 a month for a two-story brownstone, where she lives upstairs. Or "Farmer John" Norborg, a 53-year-old self-employed gardener who tends a spice garden in back of the cafe in exchange for meals.

Another regular donated a quarter-acre lot for a vegetable garden three blocks away; retired oil-and-gas engineer Bill Wood picks up the water bill.

"I eat here all the time. Best place in the world," said Wood, 70, who favors the fruit salad.

Some customers volunteer for kitchen duty, another way to pay for meals.

Al Travland, a 66-year-old masseur, also believes honesty is both the best and most profitable policy. He, too, lets customers decide how much to pay _ and insists the concept, though foreign to corporate America, brings out the best in customers, making for good business.

Advertisement

ONE WORLD CAFE

Denise Cerreta, owner of the One World Cafe, poses outside her restaurant, Tuesday, June 29, 2004, in Salt Lake City. Cerreta serves up no fixed menu or prices. Customers can decide the value of their own meal or pay nothing. (AP Photo/Douglas C. Plzac)

MOST VIEWED STORIES

- 35 Corpses Found Shot, Beheaded in Iraq
- Cat Survives 10-Mile Trip on Top of Car

Sensible Alternatives
GEICO

Man About Town
Bob Madigan

National Security Report
American Systems Corporation

Pentagon Report
ARINC

The Politics Program
Mark Plotkin

Charity of the Month
Mattress Discounters

1050 AM Weekend Programming

"Sometimes I pay less because I have less money. But I pay more when I have money. It always seems to balance out," said customer Carolyn Pryor.

Pryor contends Salt Lake City, where "you have so many honest people," is the right place for a pay-what-you-can plan. "In any other city it might not work."

There may be a subtle prod attached to Cerreta's kindness. Kitchen workers dole out itty-bitty portions of the org meals, and hungry customers who have to ask two or three times for larger helpings may feel more generous at money chest.

With lunchtime donations averaging $5, Cerreta said she was happy to collect $60 a day. But business and rece grew to more than $700 and as much as $1,000 a day.

Still, the profit margin "comes and goes," she said. "It's a wash right now, but I'm committed to this working."

Cerreta pays her 15 workers $10 an hour; her monthly payroll is $12,000. She often has to buy equipment on cr when her rice cooker burned out recently, a customer offered to fix it.

She says the cafe is worth all the effort.

For years Cerreta ran an acupuncture clinic at her brownstone building, then decided to branch out with a sandy coffee shop.

She grew weary of offering the same menu, however, and decided overnight to take down the menu and price b

"I'm just sick of business as usual," she said.

Later she dropped the acupuncture business, turning spare rooms into cozy dining with an old-world decor.

Business appears to be booming at One World Cafe; the money box is stuffed with bills including one $20 left p out. Cerreta stuffs it back into a slot. The chest has an unlocked lid, but she doesn't seem the least bit worried.

(Copyright 2004 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewri redistributed.)

- Finfishing at the Beach Could Cost You More
- 'On Death and Dying' Author Dies at 78
- Study: Cholesterol Drugs Can Help Hearts

Phoenix Restaurant Guide

Reviews & Menus for Phoenix Arizona Find Restaurants by Cuisine & City

Fashionable Menu Covers

High Style High Quality Friendly Service and Fast Delivery

Ads by Goooooogle

About These Ads

Home | Advertise with Us | Contact Us | Privacy Statement | EEO Public File Report

AP material Copyright 2005 Associated Press. All rights reserved.

This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten, or redistributed.