UTAH Honor-system diner stays afloat
SALT LAKE CITY — One World Cafe owner/chef Denise Cerreta ditched fixed prices for the honor system a year ago, and her experiment is on the verge of showing a profit.

"It's between you and the box," Miss Cerreta said of a money chest that sits next to a water jug and mugs on a table. "We continue to grow."

The One World Cafe depends on the kindness of strangers, rich and poor.

Take the landlord, who lets Miss Cerreta determine her rent: $1,650 a month for a two-story brownstone, where she lives upstairs. Or "Farmer John" Norborg, a 53-year-old self-employed gardener who tends a spice garden in back of the cafe in exchange for meals. Some customers volunteer for kitchen duty, another way to pay for meals.

Two children died when they were thrown from an SUV that rolled over in a crash Monday on Interstate 95 in Miami. Their mother and a 10-year-old girl were hurt. None was wearing a seat belt.
